1. UN peacekeeping efforts are one of the most important measures for peace and security, and against war and persecution. But it is also a business characterized by great injustices and contrasts. Conditions on the ground differ greatly between the troops of different countries.
2. At the same time there is a lethargy and tiredness in the UN system, and member states' views on political conflicts are often very different. Therefore, it is also difficult to say how the UN should act when the civilian population are treated badly and when governments are incapable of protecting their citizens.
3. The Swedish Social Democrat-led government's efforts during its two years in the UN Security Council have been one great success. This was evident by lifting women’s participation in peace processes and consequences linked to climate change.
4. However, there are still great challenges in creating a better world.
4. This is why we are calling for:

- Abolish the right of veto in the UN Security Council.

- Encourage UN to greater extent include women in peace negotiations.

- Fulfill the UN's demands for peacekeeping and peace-making efforts.

- That IUSY encourages member countries to join the nuclear ban TPNW.
