5   Before the electoral process, an event occurred that changed the course of the elections: the presidential 6   pardon granted by President Donald Trump to former President Juan Orlando Hernández, who had been 7   convicted of conspiracy to traffic drugs. This event marked a shift in the electorate's thinking and led to a 8   climate of tension and sudden political realignment within the Honduran population.

9   Through the ballot box, the Honduran people spoke. They did so with the clarity and firmness that comes 10 only from exhaustion with abuses and empty promises, leading them to decide to take control of their own
11 destiny. In these elections, every vote was an act of dignity. And if anything was made clear, it is that citizens
12 are not willing to allow others to decide for them what they have already decided at the polls. We now face a 13 tense scenario, charged with uncertainty.

14 With the observation and opinions of the international community, we received a strong and honest show of 15 support and cooperation, which must be valued and should reinforce the certainty that electoral decisions
16 belong exclusively to the Honduran people.

17 In light of the legitimate doubts surrounding the special vote count, the Electoral Justice Tribunal must 18 resolve the claims submitted by each political party and by those who have formally presented them. We 19 uphold a position of transparency and democratic practice, calling for the review of the tally sheets and, if 20 necessary, a vote-by-vote recount. Why should anyone fear the truth if things have been done correctly?
21 Review is a mechanism of trust, not of weakness. If we wish to close this chapter with our heads held high,
22 clarity is the only possible path. What we cannot allow, under any circumstances, is for irresponsible voices 23 to continue fueling chaos, hatred, and confrontation among Honduran brothers and sisters. We have 24 already suffered too much, and every prolonged political crisis further wounds our people, weakens 25 democracy, and delays our shared dreams.

26 Therefore, as the Innovation and Unity Social Democratic Party (PINU-SD), we affirm that we cannot allow the 27 repetition of elections—not after the exemplary effort made by the people. The National Electoral Council 28 issued a declaration with preliminary data without having resolved all submitted challenges, and the 29 margin of difference between the presidential candidate Salvador Nasralla of the Liberal Party and the 30 candidate Nasry Asfura of the National Party was very narrow. For this reason, PINU will continue to consider

31 once again putting forward the proposal for a second electoral round in order to provide certainty for future
32 elections. Honduras deserves an electoral authority that fosters trust rather than generating suspicion.

33 Despite the climate of doubt, PINU-SD secured the election of a Mayor and Vice Mayor in San Rafael, Lempira;
34 14 council members nationwide; and 4 members of Congress—2 principal deputies and 2 alternate deputies 35 —in Francisco Morazán and Cortés, respectively, as officially declared by the National Electoral Council.
36 These representatives will have the mission of striving to bring about change in the nation, ensuring that 37 social justice and the common good prevail.

38 Our call is to an active citizenry—one that does not remain in words alone, but demands, monitors, and 39 defends.
